Writes that "If our people are fancying the comforts and happiness of Peace at the sacrifice of Liberty, I hope to see my blood intermingled before such a thing can by any possible means be developed- better far to be crushed than live in disgrace our separation from the North is distinct, unalterable, complete. We are henceforth a distinct race and no interest can again unite us and every effort on the part of the northern government only makes the breach wider. We have new of a great battle being fought on the Chickahominy in which brother John was doubtless engaged. If he has fallen, he is only numbered with the immortal slain around the fair Capital of our idol Confederacy. I would willingly be by his side and contest every inch of the sacred soil of the old dominion with the monster for we have beaten..." and on and on and on in similar vein. VF. $135.00

We are on one side of the river and Jackson on the other, not more than two miles apart. Our men and theirs keep up a firing across the river at each other every day with cannon. Our force here I am not able to give but the whole country is full of soldier and ready for Old Gen. Jackson's Stonewall Brigade. If he wants to get another licking, let him pitch in again. We are ready for him anytime. We had a big fight with him near Winchester on the 23rd of March. There was 62 wounded and 6 killed out of Regt. There was nine wounded out of our company: Capt. Kelley, Lieutenant Slocum, Privates Retan, Barrett, Miller, Crump, Raper, Meras, & Bailey. Since, two of them died- Crump & Barrett..." The fight commenced about ten in the morning and lasted till dark. Heavy cannonading lasted till four in the evening, when the Infantry commenced firing and was kept till dusk when the enemy retreated and the firing ceased. Our men remained on the battlefield till morning. We took our dead off the field during the night. I tell you it was a horrible sight to behold, to see the dead and wounded Rebels lying on the ground. There was over one hundred in one

Discusses Atlanta campaign & whipping Rebels out of Atlanta, Yesterday we started with a train of citezens for the rebel lines. Gen. Sherman has issued an order for all citezens to leave the city either north or south. The most of them will go north I think. Those that we took away yesterday were mostly women and children. I tell you Liz, it looked rather hard to seem them leaving their homes. Some of them having lived here all thier life. I see a good many of them crying. One lady that we had in one of our ambulances cried when the train started. When she got along by her house she stoped to get some clothes. An old man & woman came tottering out to see her. They shook hands with her and bade her good byee, told her that they should never see her again as they was so old they could not live much longer. In a little ways farther we came to a small burying ground. She said her father & mother & two of her children were buried there. She cried. She said that she had no relatives north or she would go there. Her relatives were all south and that was all the way she had to go. I pity them but that is the fortune of war and the price of treason. I see another young woman as I was riding through the city. She was a handsome one too sitting in a porch rocking a baby to sleep. She was singing ever of the I'm fondly dreaming. I suppose she was thinking of her husband that is most likely in the army. Our shells have completely riddle a large portion of the city.
